

DAGBANI

DICTIONARY

Major Phase Print-out 24th. October 2014

compiled by Tony Naden (G.I.L.L.B.T.)

This version is the final stage of Tony Naden's involvement in compiling this Dictionary, having been asked to advise in 1977, and resumed detailed work since August 2004.

Acknowledgements and History

This is the ‘Dagbani Dictionary’ not the ‘GILLBT Dagbani Dictionary’ or the ‘Tony Naden Dagbani Dictionary’: a dictionary grows from the cooperative work of successive compilers.

There are 25 names on my list of data sources in the basic database (some represent groups or committees), many more are the names of those who have contributed to the on-going project by organisation, encouragement, finance or by adding, challenging or checking words, spellings and formatting and the technical aspects of production.

I usually refer mainly to those who have produced major stages of the Dictionary, from the foundational work of E. Foster Tamakloe whose material and schema still shapes the work, via John Chernoff (assemblage and keyboarding of early material), Fr. Maurice Pageault (list of verbs), Roger Blench, Knut Olawsky (field dictionary), and Ibrahim Mahama (printed dictionary).

My own development of the Dictionary has covered 4 main aspects:

- Bringing in content from the lists of Pageault, Blench, Olawsky and Mahama, and such minor sources as Irvine’s book on trees.
- Adding plentiful examples from the published literature to illustrate the forms and usage of each word for which they could be found. Many new words also came out of this process: I have attempted to ensure ‘closure’ (no word in an example which does not have an entry).
- Roughing out the outlines of distinguishing of similar words as separate homophonous entries (words that just accidentally sound the same), labelled with subscript numerals (e.g. di₁ ‘don’t!’, di₂ ‘eat’, di₃ ‘it’), and within the entries between different numbered senses
- Adding numerous lexicographical features of a full dictionary as opposed to a wordlist or vocabulary – cross-references to words of similar meaning or form, expressions and collocations, etymologies and sources of borrowed words, scientific name of animal and plant species, and in the underlying database source of data, pictures, thesaurus keys and semantic indices.

The main repository is a full database which can be accessed by the TOOLBOX database program, or, because of the comparatively non-intrusive Standard Format markup tags, used in any text editor and adapted to your preferred database program.

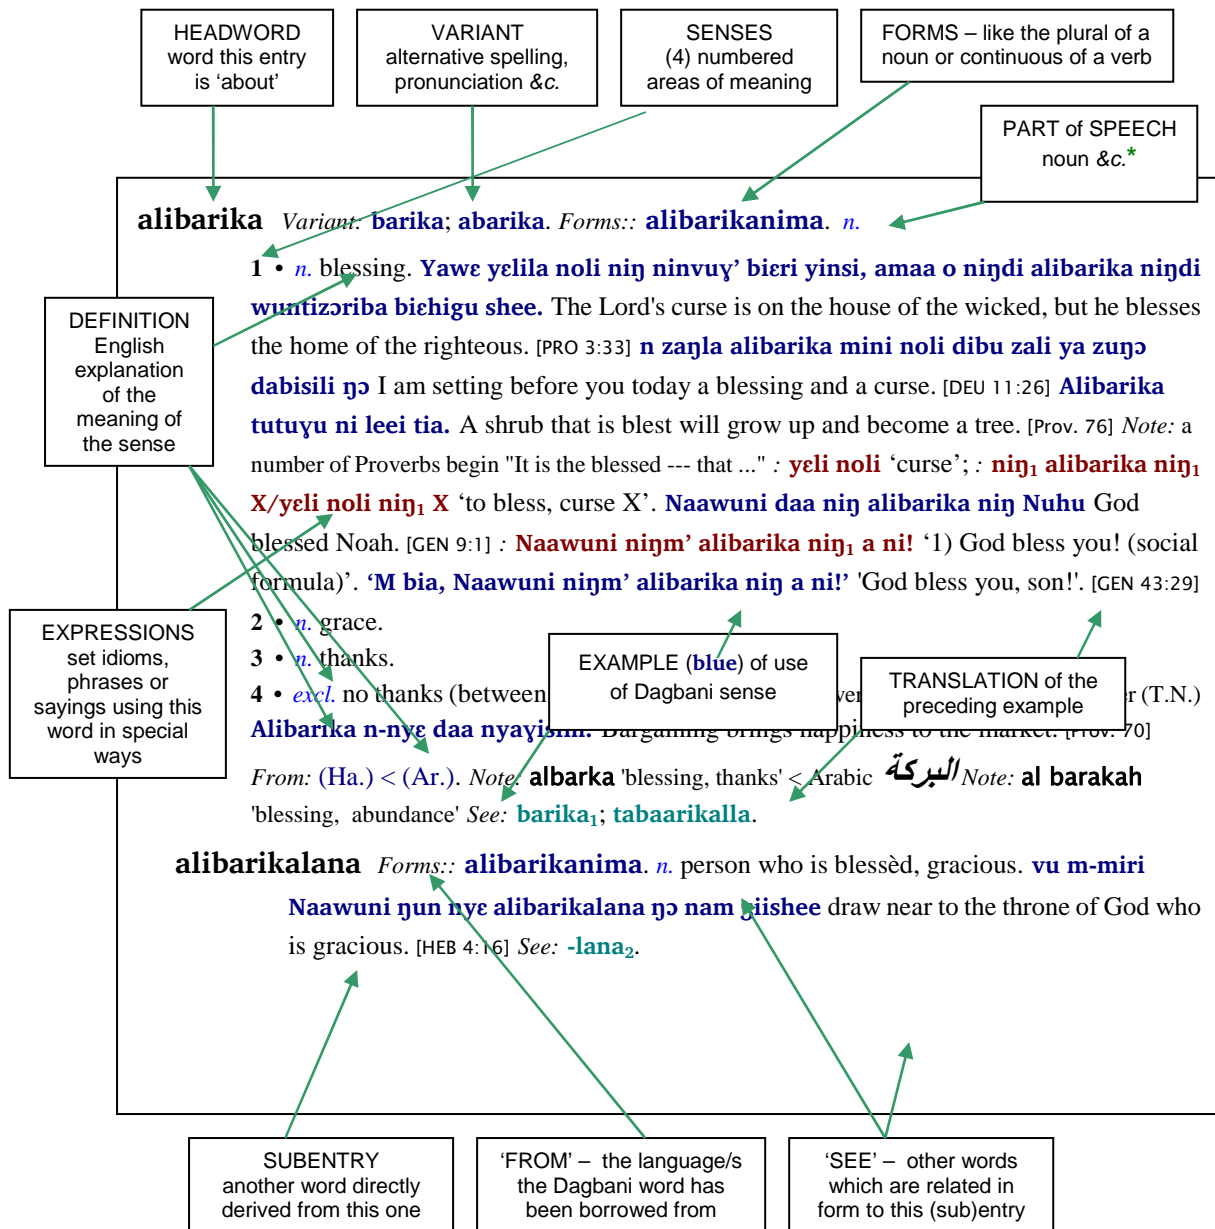

There are fields there which are not present in this version, and the database softwares will make it possible for other selections from the data to be made to make dictionaries for specialist needs.

We encourage you to use and share this material freely, and parts may be quoted for normal purposes of scholarly research and debate, with acknowledgement. No charge may be made for sharing this Dictionary or any publication which is based wholly or in part on this Dictionary without consulting me or Dictionary Dept. at

Form of an Entry

 Parts of Speech:

These refer to the use of the word in Dagbani grammar, not the part of speech of its English translation. adj(ective); adv(erb); aux(iliary); cj [conjunction]; demon(strative); disc(ourse particle); excl(amation); id(eophone); indef(inite); inter(rogative) [question]; loc(ative); n(oun); n.phr(ase); n.pr [proper noun, names of people and places]; n.st(em); num(eral); num.sx [numeral suffix]; pl(ural); pn [pronoun]; postpos(itio)n; pred[icator]; prep(osition); pron(oun); ptc [particle]; px [prefix]; qnt [quantifier]; rel(ative); sg [singular]; st(em); sx [suffix]; tmp [temporal]; v(erb); v.n [verbal noun]

The only really difficult ones are the descriptive words which are mostly adjectives in English. In Dagbani it may be an adjective which joins on to the stem form of the noun yel' bieyu "a bad matter" (full form of "matter" is yelli), or a verb (Yelli maa bie. "The matter is bad."), there may be a noun (biem "badness"). An adverb usually comes at the end and the sentence would be complete without it (Di kparimi kirikiri. "It is locked firmly."). The 'ideophone' class needs more study in Dagbani: these words combine unusual form, often reduplicated, with usage as adverb (especially to emphasise another descriptive word), occasionally as adjective, or as predicative adjective (as in "He is good." as opposed to "A good man is reliable.”) the meaning may be complex “long and flexible”, “round and big”. These words are uncommon and it is difficult to find all the uses exemplified with one word:

Introduction

gbuu, jigijigi, dill, lilib (unusual form)

o ni she kolikoli “S/He will sew it nicely.” (adverb) paligi layilayi “become shining white” sabigi libilibi “become very dark” (emphasise another descriptive word)

nema nyayinyayi “fine clothes” (adjective)

luy’ sheja din be gbirimagbirima “places which are rough” (predicative adjective)

Notes on Other Parts of the Entry:

Headword: Where possible the spelling is that recommended by the Orthography committee.

Variants: These may be frequently-found mis-spellings or older spellings still in print, or slightly-different forms of the word in different pronunciations or dialects.

Forms: Where possible the singular and plural of nouns are given. There may also be the form used in a phrase construction and the form used in compounds and with adjectives (the latter is given with a final hyphen):

bia Forms:: bii. Forms:: bihi. Forms:: bi-.

Definition: Where grammatical detail is mentioned it is enclosed in square brackets []

Notes: There are many different types of things noted. A double query ?? indicates that the preceding information is dubious and needs checking, a suggestion or explanation of the problem may follow.

Dagbani Examples: These are mostly drawn from the Dagbani Bible, the published collection of Dagbani Proverbs, and various published booklets. References to the sources are given in brackets. Further detail will be available on application, in the basic database and the more-detailed introductory material.

English Translations: If the translation is enclosed in single quotes: 1) If it is a scriptural quotation the text of an English translation of the same passage has been used. 2) If it is a proverb, an English proverb with the same application has been given.

English Used: The English is basically British English as used officially in Ghana. Where there are very common usages of Ghanaian or West African English which even educated people will use (e.g. ‘chop’ for ‘eat’) these forms are appended “‘chop’ [Gh.]”, and similarly where American English is very different “‘trousers, ‘pants’ [Am.]”. In some cases I write as single words what may be hyphenated or two words in normal English punctuation where a single Dagbani word corresponds (“guineafowl”, “frontyard”); and in literal translations a full stop instead of a space indicates that what is a phrase in English is one word in Dagbani “viela ‘to.be.nice’”. While a Dagbani-speaker will learn quite a lot about English from frequent study of this Dictionary, it is not designed to help learners of English and specialist textbooks should be used for that purpose.
